Some Tips...

When researching online, pay close attention to the each program's eligibility requirements and application process:

- 1) The eligibility requirements to participate in the programs vary, so make sure that you fit their income and insurance status requirements before applying.
- 2) To participate in most of these programs, you will need to fill out an application found on the assistance program's website.
- 3) Most applications require the prescribing doctor to sign off on the application or provide an original paper prescription.
- 4) Some programs require payment to participate and receive medicines.

What If You Can't Find a Prescription Assistance Program?

If your medications are not part of a prescription assistance program, there may still be options for you.

First: You can do some research and compare prices at several different pharmacies in town (Walgreens, Wal-Mart, Schnucks, Meijer, etc.). Drug prices can vary drastically, and several of the pharmacies have a $4 prescription list. These $4 lists vary from pharmacy to pharmacy, so it is worth checking with all (or several) of them before deciding where to purchase your medications.

Second: If you are unable to find a prescription assistance program or another affordable way to buy and access your medications, discuss medication alternatives with your doctor. Your doctor may be able to prescribe you an alternative medication that works for you just as well and is more affordable (either because it is included in a prescription assistance program or on a $4 list).
